A practical example from recent personal experience. Finally finished the unread parts of the book. Recommended as an introduction to practical creative method. At that time I remember being a bit disappointed. There this book was among my art supplies. So I read it again. That book was to spur your creativity. The four rolls are explorer artist judge and warrior. Many of the stories and examples were the same. This I admit was creative but not too original. I think I need to work most on my Warrior. Absolutely brilliant thinking out of the box. Ask what-if questions and look for hidden analogies. Break the rules and look at things backwards. Add something and take something away. Ultimately you'll come up with an original idea. Ask what's wrong and if the timing's right. Question your assumptions and make a decision. And when you carry your idea into action be a Warrior. Bad sequel. It is a quick read that gets you thinking productively. He groups these skills and approaches into four rolls.
